

Nili Steinfeld is the head of the Digital Communication track and the academic manager of the Institute for the Study of New-Media, Politics and Society at the School of Communications, Ariel University. Her research interests are e-participation, e-government and e-politics. She studies privacy and surveillance online, use of social networks as public spheres, citizens-politicians online engagement, virtual contact and online political discourse. She combines various methodological approaches, among them online experiments, surveys, eye tracking and digital methods for scraping and analyzing digital objects.