

Erin Harbinson is a Research Fellow for the Robina Institute of Criminal Law and Criminal Justice at the University of Minnesota Law School in the United States. She received her PhD in criminal justice from the University of Cincinnati and while pursuing her doctorate, worked for the University of Cincinnati Corrections Institute assisting criminal justice agencies with the implementation of evidence-based practices by evaluating correctional programs and conducting training for correctional staff on risk assessment, core correctional practices, and effective programming. Prior to joining the Robina Institute, Dr. Harbinson worked at the Council of State Governments Justice Center as a policy analyst, where she provided technical assistance to states implementing justice reinvestment legislation and data driven policies. Dr. Harbinson's research interests are in corrections, criminal justice policy, and white-collar crime. In her current role at the Robina Institute, she works on a variety of probation and parole research projects that focus on topics related to risk assessment, supervision conditions, revocations policies, fines and fees, health, and parole release decision-making.
